SHORT CV. Marcello Lupi (1968) studied classics at the University of Naples 'Federico II', where he graduated in 1993 and attended a PhD program in ancient history. His doctoral dissertation was successfully defended in 1998. At the same University he held a post-doctoral position from 2001 to 2005; afterwards, during the academic year 2005-06, he was fellow at the Center for Hellenic Studies, Harvard University. After being contract professor in the subsequent two years, in May 2008 he was appointed 'ricercatore' (i.e. assistant professor) of Greek history at the Second University of Naples, now renamed as University of Campania 'Luigi Vanvitelli'. Since December 2019 he is associate professor. During these years he has constantly held the teaching of Greek History both at introductory level in undergraduate courses and in advanced courses for graduate students.

MAJOR RESEARCH AREAS. Since his first book – a revision of his doctoral dissertation where he identified a 'generational' structure operative in many aspects of Spartan society – his research interests focus mainly on the social and institutional history of Sparta. Currently, he is working on a monograph on the prerogatives of Spartan kings and on major work on villages and civic subdivisions in archaic and classical Sparta, while an introductory handbook on the history and the representations of Sparta has been recently published. More broadly, his areas of specialization include Greek archaic history, Greek citizenship, Delphic oracular traditions and Greek historiography of the 5th and 4th century BC.
